

How to Search JSTOR

Let's say you were searching for articles on The Odyssey and Homer.

Just type in your search terms in the first box.

And then let's say you're also interested in finding articles written by a particular author.

Just type in the author's last name in the second box and use the drop down menu to AUTHOR.

And then click 'search.'

JSTOR organizes its results into neat little categories.

You can look at all the results, journals, books, or pamphlets.

You're probably most interested in reading the full text journal articles. So let's go here.

Let's take a look at one of our results. Here, you are given a few options to read the full text.

You can flip through a scanned version of the article, open the P.D.F., or email yourself the citation.
