Linda grew up in Dundas, and Mike even has the same jobs as the nurse at Hamilton General Hospital. The Halls own a large, two-storey house in Ancaster, but I wouldn't want to live downtown, says Mike. He just started work in an office setting. The rest are blue-collar mix. Police officers, teachers, firefighters and butchers. These aren't single-family incomes, "It's a very friendly neighbourhood. " Smith said. "A lot of people who live near him."

Gina Smith is known as the mayor in his neighbourhood. She's the kind of guy people go to with their problems because she gets on and off the bike. and culture are also drawn. “It's a self-selection hypothesis.” Linda says. “You come to Ancaster, you become a community member that respects you who are or who you want to be.”
